

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A material layer containing impurities that react with water molecules is formed on a substrate. The material layer is then heated under a pressure
5 exceeding one atmosphere and in the presence of water vapor to generate pores in the material layer. The material layer may form the interlayer insulating layer of a semiconductor device.